

Teaching Assistants A Class Act

UNISON speaking up for TAs

Most schools today couldn't run without teaching assistants.

Teaching assistants work with teachers to help our children learn and develop to be the best they can be.

Teaching assistants'* roles vary between schools, but they carry out a huge variety of tasks and schools couldn't function without them. With the right training, some teaching assistants teach whole classes under the direction of a qualified teacher. Head teachers, teachers, pupils and parents all place huge value on teaching assistants.

Teaching assistants:

- ★ adapt resources for disabled students
- ★ work with individual pupils, small groups and children with special needs
- ★ supervise classes for absent teachers
- ★ manage other classroom support staff
- ★ support pupils' social and emotional well-being
- ★ supervise children on out-of-school activities
- ★ monitor, assess and record pupil data
- ★ run breakfast and after-school clubs
- ★ invigilate exams and tests
- ★ supervise lunch and play times
- ★ prepare learning materials.

And yet they are poorly paid for the responsibility they take; often work unpaid overtime and have insecure contracts.

\ TAs have a number of titles including learning support assistants, classroom assistants and pupil support assistants.*
